Question 1: What is the cure process?

Answer 1: The cure process allows a Solicitation participant to cure certain non-conforming information or uploaded documents from their abstract (the "Offer"), provided the participant timely submitted such Offer.

Question 2: How do I know if I need to cure anything and what I need to cure?

Answer 2: SCE issues cure notices via email to applicable participants identifying the information or documentation such participant must cure and the deadline by which such cure must be completed.

Question 3: What happens if I fail to comply with a cure notice?

Answer 3: Failure to comply with the requirements of any cure notice may result in such Offer being disqualified from further consideration in the Solicitation.

Question 4: Does the cure process allow bidders to augment their abstract's energy efficiency component of their bid?

Answer 4: No, the cure process allows bidders to cure only minor deficiencies (e.g., certain omissions, such as failure to fill out or execute the representation form, failure to provide the participant's company address, failure to provide a complete primary point of contact information).

Question 5: Is the cure process managed consistently across all participants?

Answer 5: Yes, SCE is applying the cure process consistently. The cure process is a standard process used in solicitation activities regularly at SCE and includes close coordination with the Independent Evaluator.
